Back to School Safety Awareness & Tips

When you cannot be with your kids, make sure they always, always know how to reach you. Let them know you are just a phone call away & can come home in the case of an emergency or serious situation. Talk to your kids & be sure that they would feel comfortable with being alone or being in charge of the younger ones for a couple of hours. If you have any doubts at all, it's best to find someone to care for the kids until you get home.

If your kids will be walking to school, or have to walk a few blocks to a bus stop, make sure you teach them to obey traffic signals & rules if they must cross streets. Younger children need closer supervision, but this is a great time to start teaching those habits. By the time they walk by themselves to school or the bus stop, they will be confident in their ability to know what to do.

Have conversations with your kids about their day at school-what happened, who they had lunch with, & what they are learning. Kids are not always forthcoming if there are any problems at school, and keeping lines of communication open & noticing any changes in behavior and/or grades can be big clues for you as the parent. Bullying has become a larger & larger problem now, & the more you talk with your kids, the better you are able to resolve any issue that may arise.

When kids are using the computer & the Internet for homework & school projects, monitor their time spent & the websites they've visited. Use the parental controls on your system when available. There are some great programs out there that can help keep your kids away from questionable sites & out of potentially unsuitable chat rooms or message boards. Cyberbullying is also on the rise; be aware of what your kids are doing while on the computer.

School can, & should be, fun & exciting for kids. They get to see their friends every day, learn new things, & spend time outside playing sports or other recreational activities as part of their school day.

But there are dangers, some bigger than others, that exist for children at school, on their way to or from school, & at after school activities. Armed with some knowledge & some planning, parents & children can be aware of the dangers & therefore be more prepared to avoid them or deal with them as they happen.

Give your kids the tools, safety knowledge & the resources to take care of themselves when you cannot be there, & parents & children alike can relax & enjoy the school year more!
